All Will See

On August 21, 2017, the skies from Oregon to South Carolina darkened in the first solar eclipse that was visible from coast to coast in 99 years. In the state of Tennessee in the small tourist town of Sevierville, some 3,700 Christians gathered for the annual Polishing the Pulpit event. During the time of the eclipse at least a third of the attendees stepped outside together to witness the event. This group of Christians broke out into the song, "How Great Thou Art". Truly this was a seen that demonstrates the amazing timing of the universe that God has created.

Looking at Genesis 1 we see all the parts of physical existence coming together. In the beginning, there was God. God was the force from which all things we know came. This same God is the only place from which matter could become which did not exist before. In all of the study of the physical world no matter the years of study, degrees, or philosophy, every evolutionist must concede that matter came from somewhere despite its infinitesimally small size. So, from where did the first spec of matter come? The evolutionist must believe that it was floating around in nothingness until it found another spec and the two created some sort of reaction. Such a reaction would occur because of certain physical laws. A belief that these things occurred because of time and luck is certainly a belief based on faith.

Dear reader, do not be mistaken that the evolutionist and the atheist do not have faith. Some evolutionists do believe in intelligent design. These are usually squelched in the academic arena. Generally, the most popular among the academic crowds are those who are evolutionists and atheists. These must demonstrate a great deal of faith in theories and models that cannot be substantiated. There are so many "missing links" on the evolutionist's chart that a logical thinker cannot follow the assertions made. To believe something exists on these charts that we have not seen is faith at the very least.

The less popular academic who concedes that intelligent design cannot be ignored also operates on faith. This faith uses the scientifically proven unreliable radiocarbon dating system to date the earth much older than the Bible would indicate. This faith is used to ease the mind of the Christian and turn him toward an ideology of theistic evolution. Once the mind is at ease that the seven days mentioned in Genesis were actually thousands of years, the remainder of the tale is easier to swallow.

Looking back and Genesis 1 we see that matter was created by Superior Intelligence in verse one. We also see that time began according to verse five. Another problem for the evolutionist is that the question of when time began is not answered. If there was once nothingness where two lonely tiny specs were floating who by themselves started the universe, when did time begin? God answers that question.

Other questions for the evolutionist include; when the sun was lit, and how did the planets all fall in line and such that the earth was the place that sustains human life? God answers these questions and much more in Genesis one without a chart of missing links.

This same God tells us of the earth's flood which would contaminate radiocarbon testing samples and render them of little if any use. This same God tells us that there will be a day when every eye will see Him and every tongue will confess the existence of the God of the universe. (Revelation 1:7; Philipians 2:9-11)

On August 21, 2017, many throughout the United States were able to witness an unusual act of God's creation. Some however, were blocked from viewing the eclipse. There is a day coming that is unable to determine as was the eclipse. On that day, everyone will see the glory of God unobstructed and meet Him for judgment. Will you be ready to meet the One Who created you as well as all of the universe? (Hebrews 9:27-28)
